Why Grenoble

"In one century, Grenoble has transformed from the capital of the Dauphine into a European metropolis of science and technology. From clean coal to new technologies, it has experienced an unprecedented period of innovation in various fields such as information technology, communication, energy, and health care. Grenoble has also attracted universities and international researchers; world-class enterprises headquarter their centers of research and development as well as grand European laboratories. Between research and enterprise, connections are multiplied, creating little by little the image of a highly intellectual city."
